MAY VACATION ASSIGNMENT

CONSUMER AWARENESS

Consumer Awareness is an act of making sure the buyer or consumer is aware of the information about products, goods, services, and consumer rights. Consumer awareness is important so that buyers can take the right decision and make the right choice. Consumers have the right to information, right to choose, right to safety, etc. It safeguards the consumer from getting lured to misleading advertisements, unsafe products, overcharging and unweighing, etc., performed by immoral businessmen. There are certain consumer rights given by the Constitution. Along with rights, consumers also have responsibilities to fulfil. More about consumer rights, responsibilities and consumer awareness in detail is presented in next pages.

GOVERNMENT POLICIES

There are two major types of E-commerce models used in a hybrid format by different platforms.

Marketplace model where the E-commerce entity acts as a mere platform between a business and a buyer. In this case the business owns the products and when ordered by the buyer and delivered by the entity to the buyer or the customer for a relatively low percentage of commission.

Inventory model where E-commerce entity is either a seller or a reseller of the product. In this case the entity buys the product in bulk at a discounted price and sells it to the buyer at the marked-up price which results in higher profits.

One of the introduced policies was that, "A single seller can have only 25% of the total sales on a E-commerce platform." Cloudtail India, a company formed by Amazon to copy out the Inventory model in India, had almost 47% of total sales share on Amazon India. Due to the introduction of this policy their profit has taken a huge hit.
